History of Rome

Legend says that Rome was built by the twin sons of Mars, Romulus and Remus. It became a centre of power first during the establishment of the Roman Republic, which started in 509BC and ended in 27 BC. Following that, Rome saw the establishment of the more famous Roman Empire, which expanded to cover most of the Western world and saw emperors like Nero and Caligula who are still known today. During the height of it's grandeur, the Roman empire comprised of over 50 modern day countries - majorly from Europe and Middle East. Christianity made its debut in Rome in the first century AD and took a firm hold after the first emperor Constantine converted. The current Pope is a converted figurehead formerly known as the Bishop of Rome before the Edict of Thessalonica. Currently, it is one of the most visited places in the world, besides being a UNESCO World Heritage site. It is also the seat of the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation. It is a pilgrimage site for Christians the world over. Hosting a majorly Italian crowd, a minor 9.5% of it's population is of non-Italian heritage.
